Traveling by train

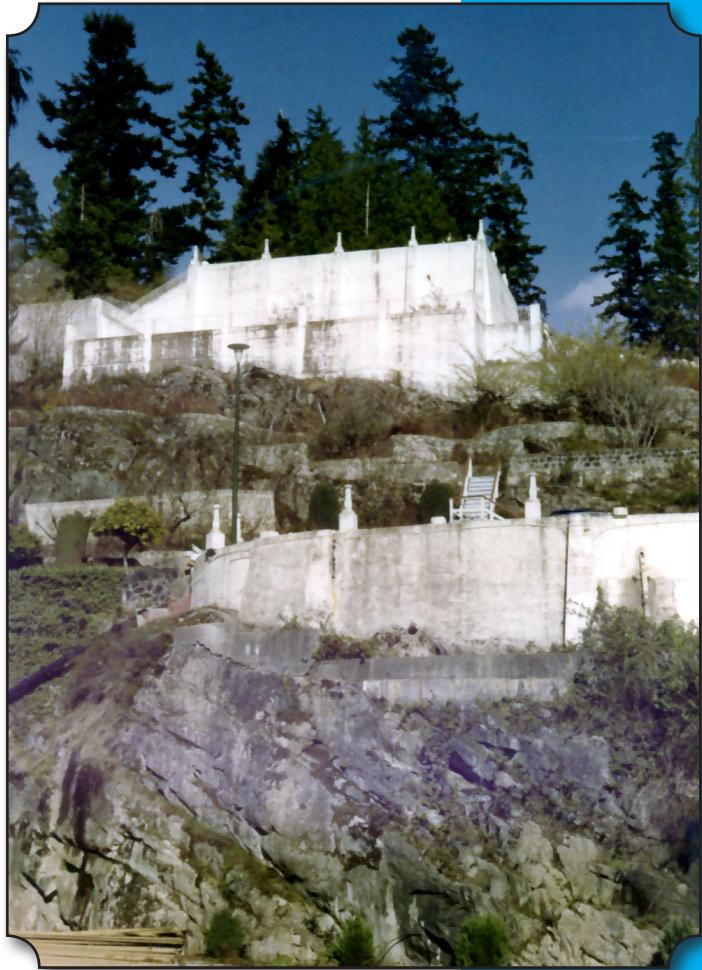

Our Trip to the Ocean had a lot of surprises. We went on many adventures and saw many things that we did not expect.

I was glad that I got to go on this landscape adventure with my family and reflect on the beauty and grandeur of the scenic vistas we saw.

We traveled by rail and saw not only lighthouses, but also castles and cliffs along the way.

Visiting the Castle

The Castle terraces and the castle grounds were a slight to be hold if you look very closely you can see one of us standing at the very top looking out over the scene below.

Just one of the many cliffs we were to encounter on our journey on the winding road as we traveled from location to location.

The white plaster of the walls had weathered over time and the surrounding gardens had become overgrown but this just added to the mystery of who had once lived here and what would we see as we reached the top of terrace walls.

A day is hardly enough time to explore these places. We arrived at our next destination for the evening and were ready for bed.

Lighthouse at the look out

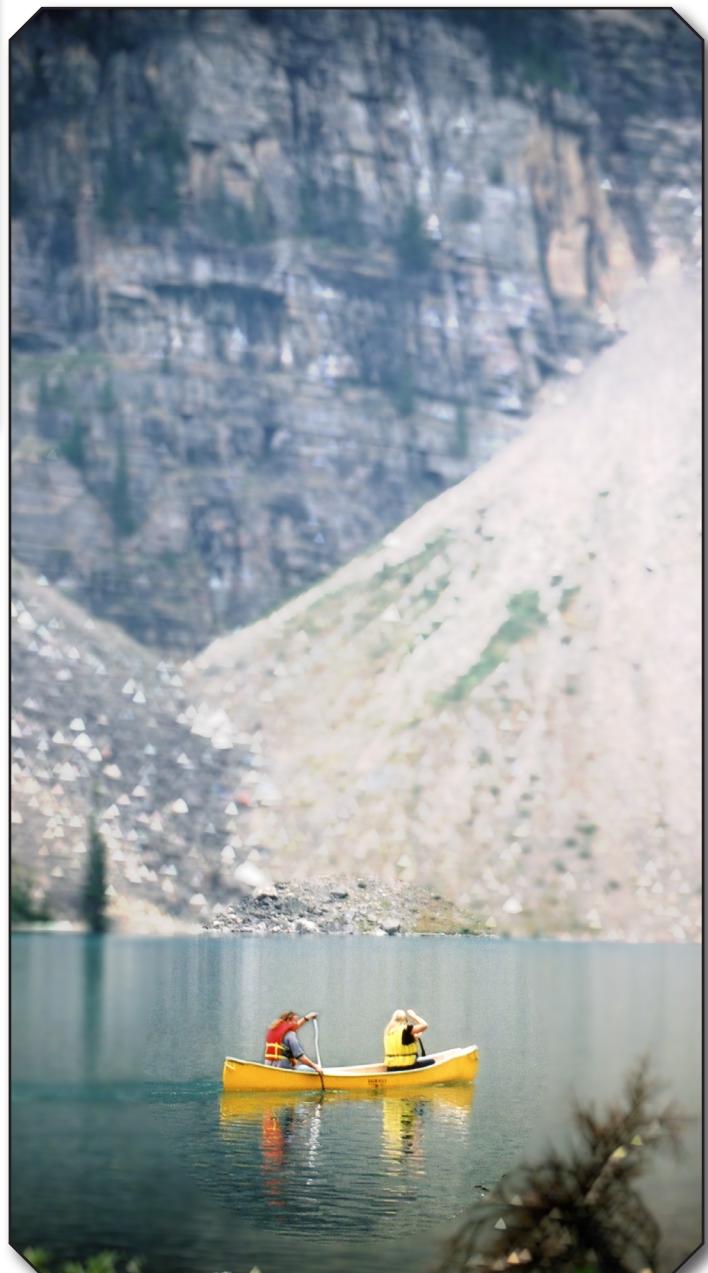

No trip along the coast would be complete without going on a canoeing adventure. With the wind at our back we quickly glided to our destination with very little paddling with the oar. Or at least that is how it seemed with the calm conditions as we entered the inlet.

Our dog played by the shore and was having the greatest time frolicking in the low tidal pools casing after sticks or anything moving in the water.

Later we climbed the cliffs of the park area to look at the lighthouse as the light reflected off the reflective glass. A perfect end to a perfect day.

Even the dog is having a good time
